war, but that did not do anything. He says that maybe if one or two slave owners say that they will give up slaves because it is the wrong thing to do it will change people’s ideas and people will think about abolishing slavery all together. Just not paying a poll tax will not change anything. Maybe if he wasn’t a weirdo and watched ants fight for an hour he would realize that he needs to do more then not pay a tax to change the ideas of a whole country. If I were him I would have protest the war openly and protested the government for taxing us for a war we did not want. Good point

Martin Luther King Jr. was a great man. He believed that all men were created equal and that we should all have the same rights as each other. I agree with the way that he used civil disobedience because he won the rights of all African Americans. Even though he was put in jail and sprayed with a water hose did not stop him from achieving his goal, peace and equality for all people in the United States of America.

Civil Disobedience is standing up for what you believe in by going against what the government wants you do to. Ghandi wanted freedom to all Indians and for India to be its own country. He attained it by using civil disobedience. Martin Luther King Jr. wanted freedom for all African Americans. He attained it by using civil disobedience. As you can see, civil disobedience has done many great things for our world and will do many more in future. I agree with the use of civil disobedience and I will be using it a lot more now in Ms. Ricca’s class. haha, Bring it! I have to be unjust for it to work!!

Good Points! Though I think some of your arguments need to be developed more fully. For ex. Tharau want try to stop the or w/h his one poll. Also, I would’ve liked to see quotes in here. Nice effort & ending!
